NOTED EDUCATOR AND WRITER PASSES AWAY.

Native of Adams County Who Never Tired Singing the Praises of the Old Home Place.

Prof. John Howard Wert, well known writer, educator and Civil War veteran, devoted to his native county and its history, died on Thursday of last week at his home in Harrisburg in his 80th year. He was born in Mt. Joy township Feb. 12, 1841, a son of Adam and Catherine Houghtelin Wert, started to school in the country schools and coming to town graduated from Gettysburg College in class of 1861. He enlisted in 1864 in Co. G, 20th Pa. Vol. Inf. From Orderly Sergeant he was promoted to 2nd Lieutenant and served until end of the war. He became principal of the Gettysburg schools in 1866-69 and was Superintendent of Schools 1869-72. He removed to Harrisburg in 1874 becoming 1st Assistant of the Boys' High School and in 1879 became principal of the school and in time was the first principal of the Harrisburg Central High School which he organized. In 1894 he resigned after 33 years of active educational work. He was a successful teacher in a pre-eminent degree.

Since 1894 he has given his time to writing and nothing gave him greater delight than to write about Gettysburg and Adams county. One of his first volumes was "Poems of Camp and Hearth," and a "Story of the Gettysburg Battle and Campaign." Gettysburg has had a prominent place in more recent writings. "Twice Forty Years Ago," "In the Hospitals at Gettysburg," "Little Stories of Lincoln," "The World's Decisive Battles." He also delved deep into the history of Harrisburg and wrote largely of that place. While in his Sophomore year he won a prize from the "New York Clipper" for his first novel, "The Mystic League of Three." During his life he has been a contributor to nearly 400 American publications and has written text-books for school book publishers. He had a wonderful memory and able to quote 60,000 lines of the best English and American poetry and was a most interesting conversationalist. He was a collector of rare books and it is said that his collection of works on the great Battle of Gettysburg is especially complete, comprising substantially every standard book and article that has been published. He was one of the first G. A. R. men in the State and was a charter member of Post No. 9 of this place. He married Miss Emma Letitia Aughinbaugh of Gettysburg, who died in 1909 and leaves four sons and one daughter, Howard Houck Wert, postal clerk of Harrisburg; Edward H. ## WHY NOT A TOWN BEAUTIFUL

NOW IS THE TIME TO PREVENT A TREELESS TOWN.

Save the Town—Give It a Parked Effect with Grass Plots on Either Side and Save the Trees.

The ways of a Town Council are sometimes difficult to understand. The present council are desirous to serve the town toward a better community, but they have ignored advice along one line that is hard to understand.

They want a Town Beautiful, as everyone wants.

But with concrete streets butting up against concrete pavements, in a few years time the four main streets of the town will be treeless—bald, hot and ugly looking.

The expert head of the Bureau of Municipalities was here recently. He is a man of mature years who has studied his problems in hundreds of towns and cities. He advised that the streets between curbs are wider than necessary, that a street six, eight or ten feet less would answer every demand of a progressive town with a future ahead.

Recently a delegation of the Town Council went to the State Highway Commissioner and told him how the money voted was not going to hold out. Mr. Sadler is a devoted friend of this place with a thorough practical experience; and when he advises his advice should be taken. He said the streets could be made narrower without spoiling the town, that the space saved should be given to grass and trees and that with such a parked town there could be a saving of $10,000.

Why are our council running the risk of disgusting its best friends by not taking good advice? Why don't they listen to the practical wisdom of these experts and friends? Why do they insist upon an ugly treeless future? They have voted for street pavement from curb to curb as they are now, except for short extreme portions. Carlisle street to Centre Square and Baltimore to Steinwehr avenue will be treeless in a few years unless they change their action. Chambersburg and York streets will be in like condition.

Save the town. Take the advice of our friends. Mr. Sadler has met our representatives in the most friendly way every time they have met him, anxious to help and serve and going his limit. He wants the welfare of the town, not to push it toward a treeless, ugly future.

At this meeting of Town Council one councilman plead for the saving of the $10,000 but his was the only vote for such a result.

A 4 or 5 foot strip of ground on either side could be made to serve another purpose. The inside space could be a tree line and the outside line a space for all gas and water mains in the future. The building of our streets would then be permanent, and a prohibition against tearing would be possible.

The Town Council has time yet to meet and vote that the four main streets as far as Square, should contribute to a Town Beautiful, otherwise a treeless town ugly is our future.

Swimming Pool.

It has come to the ears of some of the members of the Kurtz Memorial Playground Association that there has been regret on the part of a number of Gettysburgians who contributed to the Kurtz Memorial Playground maintenance last summer that no swimming pool was built in 1919.

That the people may understand just why no swimming pool was built last year the information in the hands of the Playground Association needs to be made public.

When the drive was made last spring the Playground Association expected to build a swimming pool for about $2500. The people of Gettysburg were asked to contribute $4000 toward the pool and the playground maintenance. Only $2811.48 were subscribed of which $184.25 is still outstanding, and which the Association has tried in vain to collect.

Other sums came into the treasury later in the season from Mr. Kurtz, the baseball return, etc., as was shown in the dodger distributed by the Playground Association a few weeks ago but on these added sums no reliance could be put by the Association because it was not known until the season was half over approximately what these added sums would be.

A Chicago firm of swimming pool experts was consulted, however. To build a pool 60x30 feet it would take 175 bbl. cement, 53 cu. yds. sand, 78 cu. yds. pebbles or broken stone, reinforcement 4850 lbs., hardware, nails, tools, etc. $200; total, $1496.50. The cost just indicated was computed on an estimate made by one of Gettysburg's most reliable contractors, and the price of cement was quoted to the Playground Association at cost by a certain Gettysburg firm. This $1496.50 does not include the cost of lumber, labor, the erection of bath houses, dressing rooms, cost of piping the water and the water itself and the employment of a competent man who could act as guard as well as the janitor of the place. As the summer advanced last year the prices began to soar and are still soaring. Furthermore a pool 60x30 feet is too small for an outdoor swimming pool for Gettysburgians, and in addition to that there ought to be erected at the same time a wading pool for children.

To any person who has any business insight at all it is obvious that the Playground Association acted wisely in refraining from erecting a swimming pool last summer. If a pool had been erected, its cost would have swamped the Playground treasury, and then some. Then what would have become of the Ward Baseball League, the leveling of the playground, the trained worker, etc.? "Why, then," some person asked, "was any mention made of erecting a swimming pool last summer by the Playground solicitors?" The answer obviously is that when a swimming pool was mentioned by them, the actual cost of erecting an outdoor pool and the greatness of the undertaking was not appreciated. Because of the knowledge which the Finance Committee of the Playground Association has at this time, it would be foolish to think of erecting an outdoor swimming pool, baths, dressing rooms, etc. for less than $8000 or $10,000.

Therefore no attempt will be made to erect an outdoor swimming pool in the summer of 1920.

It is to be regretted that any plans for the playground for 1920 do not call for permanent betterments—a beginning for the swimming pool equipment instead of an indefinite postponement of one of the greatest assets of any playground.

High Costs and Low-

THE cost of living is not a popular subject!

But here's a thought that cannot be sidetracked.

With the war over, telephone rates reverted to the pre-war figures.

A welcomed contribution to the solution of America's biggest problem, no doubt!

But unfortunately our costs for labor and materials have not likewise gone back to what they were before the war.

We would be in the position of a most willing contributor to the happiness of 1920 were it not that we're between the millstones.

It is a very serious situation! No one likes to complain—but we'd be mighty poor stewards for the public in the administration of one of their most vital services if we did not put the matter squarely before them.

We must have rates that will give us money enough to pay our bills for equipment and materials, assure our employees adequate wages, improve and extend the service, and permit the owners of the property to earn a decent return upon their investment.

The service must be kept going and adequate rates are the only remedy for the situation.

THE MAN WHO SUSPECTS that he has kidney trouble and neglects to take measures promptly for his relief is taking a dangerously unwise risk. If the kidneys are not properly performing their function of purifying the blood stream, waste products and poisonous acids remain in the system and cause nervousness, rheumatic pains, backache, languidness, sore muscles, swollen joints, stiffness, puffiness under eyes and other weakening symptoms.

Why Colds Are Dangerous.

You are often told to "beware of a cold," but why? We'll tell you: Every cold weakens the lungs, lowers the vitality and paves the way for the more serious diseases. People who contract pneumonia first take cold. The longer a cold hangs on, the greater the danger, especially from the germ diseases, as a cold prepares the system for the reception and development of the germs of consumption, diphtheria, scarlet fever, and whooping cough. The quicker you get rid of your cold the less the danger of contracting one of these diseases. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has a great reputation as a cure for colds and can be depended upon. It is pleasant to take. People's Drug Store.

FARM THRIFT REMEDY FOR HIGH PRICES

Secretary of Agriculture Calls Farmers Backbones of Nation

Recommends Government Securities as Best and Safest Investment

"The entire world at this time is striving frantically to regain its equilibrium which was so badly disturbed by the European war. Here in the United States our great problem is the stabilization of prices that we may escape the great and unnecessary burden that inflated prices inflict. The greatest stabilizer in the country today, and one that we may all employ, is thrift," states Fred Rasmussen, Secretary of Agriculture.

"By the practice of thrift, we may curtail our demands on the other industries, thus aiding in solving the problem of under-production which is in a large measure responsible for our high prices," continues the secretary. "Nowhere is there a more excellent opportunity for the practice of thrift than on the farm. The farmer, to be thrifty, must study and understand his land and its needs. He must also understand the conditions in his neighborhood, that he may produce the crops that are most needed and that find easiest sale. He must strive to produce the highest quality of products and he must make every acre produce its maximum quantity."

"But true thrift embraces many other things. The farmer must study feedings so that he feeds his live stock and his poultry at a minimum of cost with a maximum of efficiency. He must study his soil-fertilization in the same way, so that he does not needlessly expend great sums for improper fertilizers."

"He must care for his farming machinery, protecting it from the weather and seeing that it is stored properly and kept in such shape that each piece will last until it has been worn out by actual service, and not by carelessness or the elements. With the price of leather so high, he should carefully clean and oil the harness from time to time, that it may render longer service. He should maintain his buildings and fences in such condition that his crops are not likely to suffer from the weather or from straying cattle."

"In short, the farmer, to practice real thrift, must do everything within his power to increase his production and the standard of his products, while at the same time sparing no effort to reduce the cost of operating his farm to the minimum consistent with efficient management, so as to be able to lay aside a part of the income for future use."

"The farmer who, by thrift and good business practice, has acquired funds over and above the amount needed as working capital in the operation of his farm, is confronted with the question of safe investment, which will yield a reasonable return."

"Secretary Rasmussen in discussing the question of investment, particularly in connection with 'wild cat' promotions and stocks, advises strongly safe and secure investments. He says:

"I know no more suitable securities than the Government Bonds and Savings Stamps of $5.00 each, maturity value, and the five-year Treasury Savings Certificates in denominations of $100.00 and $1000.00 at maturity. They are absolutely safe, convenient and profitable; they net 4 per cent interest compounded quarterly; are practically tax free; never depreciate in value; and may be redeemed for cash when needed."

"The individual investment in these securities will help Uncle Sam to make things go. He needs the co-operation of our farmers. They are the backbone of our national life and its finances. They help make our future secure. I hope this opportunity will be fully grasped, for therein lies a mutual benefit to every one of us."

HAS GREAT FAITH IN COCONUT

German Who Has Tried It Declares It to Be the Ideal Food for Sustenance of Man

One of the strangest characters in the world is August Engelhardt, a young German who lives on the island of Kahakou, in the German New Guinea territory. He exists entirely on the coconut, and sleeps on a bed of sand.

Engelhardt is a singularly handsome man of about thirty-five, possessing great wealth and a charming personality. He is known as the "Apostle of the Coconut," on account of the doctrine he teaches that the coconut is the original food of man, and should continue to be so, as all other foods are responsible for the bad passions in the heart and mind of man.

The "Apostle" claims to have over 500 disciples in America, and now the war is over he intends to leave his island home and come back to the old world and proclaim his teachings. He is also a "sun worshiper," living entirely in the open air, and adopting the simple dress of the natives, consisting merely of a "lav-lava," or loin cloth, and when in full dress, that is, when he receives visitors, this attire is completed by the addition of a wrist watch and a walking stick.

CANADA INVADED BY EAGLE

Bird Was Seen Flying After Long Trip, and Was Easily Captured; Given Name

The American eagle recently spread his wings and flew over Canadian soil. The eagle—a real one by the way—arrived from somewhere and landed in Sandwich, Ont. When he came, nobody knew. But it was from a long way off, as he was manifestly exhausted when he alighted on the roof of a new house at the corner of Lot and Peter streets. It was just about noon, and children coming from school stopped him, says the Detroit News.

The bird stayed on his perch for some time when the mob gathered below. The eagle surveyed the crowd in a bored manner during the minutes when he was not engaged in searching with his beak for something or things under his feathers. The crowd became larger and more threatening. Finally one braver than the rest, evidently a Briton without guile, cast the first stone.

The American eagle spread his wings to their full extent and, waiting not for the year of parole between disputations, flattered to the ground.

Down the streets of Sandwich the proud bird trotted with unhurried but dangerous steps. Through a gauntlet of citizens he ran, Indian like, turning his beak from right to left with each new step to peck at some venture some bystander or over-ardent pursuer. It looked for a time as if the bird would not be captured. But he finally came to a man whose attitude was not hostile. With scarcely a struggle, the eagle gave in.

His captor was Clyde Thornton, 31 Peters street, an American citizen. During the remainder of the day the Sandwich residents made tentative peace offerings in the form of pieces of meat. The bird accepted them ungraciously.

His name is Roosevelt, Thornton insists.

GODDESS HAS MANY STATUES

Sekhmet, of Mut, Egyptian War Divinity, Seems to Have Been a Favorite With Sculptors

The arrival at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New York, of seven statues of Sekhmet, or Mut, the ancient Egyptian goddess of war, purchased in England in 1914, reminds one of the beginnings of modern interest in archeology, for the seven statues, although their history over the last century seems difficult to trace in all its details, were, probably among the earliest results of Egyptian excavation that came to England. Something over thirty centuries ago Egyptian sculptors were carving such statues out of solid blocks of black granite for the decoration of temples; and then in 1780, as the record goes, at Arrab-sheik, working at the instigation of a Venetian priest, found a statue of Mut in the sand that had accumulated over the ruins of Karnak. Since then a good many statues of Mut have been recovered, and the strange goddess of strife, part animal and part human, as the sculptors imagined her, dwells in many a museum.

Don't Blame Mosquito

"We have lately been taught that the mosquito was the only disseminator of malaria; and that we should be safe if we should get rid of mosquitoes." But Doctor Roux, formerly chief physician of the St. Louis hospital at Jerusalem, asserts as the result of his own experience of 20 years and that of many colonial physicians, that malaria often exists where there are no mosquitoes.

He points out that everywhere in malarial countries the disease breaks out just at the time when the soil is broken for planting. He does not deny that the anopheles mosquito spreads malaria, but he says this is evidently not the only means of infection.

The old theory that malaria was caused by the bad air of swampy districts or by certain emanations from the soil may be correct after all.

Beliefs About World's End

The Mohammedans believe the time of the end of the world to be a perfect secret to all save God alone; the angel Gabriel himself acknowledged his ignorance on this point when Mohammed asked him about it. Christianity of all is the least certain about the precise time of the end. Jesus, telling his disciples of the precursory signs of the great catastrophe, said: "Verily, this generation will not pass before my words shall be accomplished." The first Christians, accordingly, looked to immediate fulfillment of the prediction and believed the end of the world near at hand. Although the advent failed to come, they claimed to believe in its near realization. Still, centuries followed centuries and the world continued to live.

Royal Grapes at Low Prices

The vine which belonged to the kings of France still exists at Fontainebleau and bears fruit. One day in September, the administration of the demesne, according to established custom, sold the grapes by award. There were 600 kilos of grapes, and he astonishing thing is that they sold for 525 francs! Yet the little common grapes to be bought on the Paris street barrows fetch from 20 to 25 sous the pound. Royal grapes grow cheap these days in France. It would seem. Those purchasers must have thought themselves fortunate when they bought grapes for a mere 525 francs, and good is not a consolation offered to be met with in France nowadays.

On Picket Duty

By IDOLA FORRESTER

(Copyright, 1920, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Nancy had waited for the Carrolls all day long at the little village that lay on the east side of Mount Agona. She knew there could be no mistake. Lois had written the directions down for her painstakingly that last day in Washington.

"Don't stop over in New York. Change at Grand Central for Adirondack express. Take shuttle from Pennsylvania to Grand Central. Run no risks at all of getting mixed up. Go to Eltinge Falls. Wait in Haddon's inn for John and myself. Will arrive on 2:19."

It was so typical of Lois to treat her as if she were nine instead of seventeen. Just as though she might have strayed along the way. She sat on the upper porch of the old wooden hotel staring rebelliously off at the wonderful panorama below her—a slim, medium-sized girl in dark blue traveling suit that only accentuated the bright red gold of her hair.

Two trains from the south came and went with no sign of her sister or John. Finally she went down in the cool, quiet dining room and ate a lonely dinner. She didn't know where to wire them. They were to have left Washington directly after she did, stop over an hour in Philadelphia to see John's people, and come straight on up.

As she stared anxiously down at her dessert of apple pie and whipped cream, the plump boy from the office laid a telegram beside her. It was from Lois. She tore it open thoughtfully, and gasped.

"Absolutely impossible to leave tonight. Petsie has measles. Go to lodge until we come. Get Mrs. Dupre."

"LOIS."

Petsie! That was John, Jr., aged four years, the ruler of an absolute monarchy. And measles meant at least four weeks. Nancy set her lips firmly and frowned at the apple pie. All her vacation plans gone to smash because Petsie had caught the measles somehow at the very last minute. He had been fretful and cross for several days, and a little feverish, but Lois had said it was just the heat in Washington. He would be all right as soon as they got to the mountains. And now Nancy was doomed to spend four weeks in this place. The boy lingered at the door talking to the head waitress. She smiled at him invitingly, and he came back.

Did he know any person in the neighborhood named Mrs. Dupre? He grinned at her reassuringly. Sure he did. He was Joe Dupre himself. His mother helped cook at the hotel in the rush time. Other times she cooked in camps. Nancy finished her pie in peace, and after dinner Joe took her out around the old flagged walk of the hotel garden to find his mother. She was a little, dark-skinned, French-Indian woman, with big, somber dark eyes, and a smile like Joe's. And she understood perfectly Nancy's plight. It was nothing, she assured her. They would go up to the camp in the morning and take Joe with them to cut wood and carry water and make trips back for mail and groceries.

"Is there anybody at all living near us?" asked Nancy. John had mentioned bears casually, she remembered suddenly.

"Only Andre Mando. He is Mr. Hollister's guide, very good guide. No bother us."

Thus reassured Nancy had taken possession of the lodge to wait on Petsie's spell of measles. It wasn't half as bad as she had imagined. The lodge overlooked a beautiful mountain lake. There was a huge fireplace on the wide porch, and in the living room low bookcases built in everywhere filled with books that John had had sent up for their vacation.

But the lake lured her. Joe found an old boat that had done duty in past summers, and tried to patch it up for her, but still it leaked somewhat. She learned how to paddle as well as row, and liked Joe's canoe better than the old tug, as she named the rowboat. And the third week, as she paddled cautiously around close inshore she discovered the rising smoke from another campfire. Doubtless it came from Mando's place, she thought, and paddled on without curiosity. After all, doing picket duty wasn't so bad. She rather enjoyed the responsibility.

And suddenly she heard a peculiar sound in the water behind her, a heavy splash and deep breathing. Just one glance back at the dark shaggy head lifting from the water and Nancy would have fainted if it had not been for some good old pioneer strain far back that held her steady. But it was a bear and a large one, and paddling steadily in the wake of the canoe. She couldn't swim at all, and the distance to shore seemed a mile, when it was barely a stone's throw. Trying to keep her nerve and strength, she paddled faster and faster, but the bear gained on her, and all at once her paddle struck a sunken tree, caught and snapped in half.

"Don't jump. Keep quiet!" The voice came from the shore, but Nancy had covered her face with her hands. It was a tragic moment, and yet for the life of her she couldn't keep out of her head a crazy little rhyme the girls had said at school:

"Algy met a bear,
And the bear was bulgy,
And the bulge was Algy."

There came the crack of a rifle and a floundering in the water behind her; then a canoe slipped out from shore and a man sent a second shot into the bear, killing it. Nancy looked up, her hands still on her face. He was white and young, and very good looking. And the worst of it was he didn't appear one bit concerned over her. He was too busy throwing a rope over the bear to tow it in behind him.

"Wonder if he'll swap me," he laughed. "Some bear, isn't he? You were carking, the way you led him in for me."

"I didn't want to lead him," said Nancy with a sense of outraged dignity. "He was chasing me, you know!"

"Well, you kept your head, anyway. Some girls would have fallen overboard the minute they saw him. My name's Jack Hollister, and I think we're neighbors. You're Miss McAlarney, aren't you? I've heard Lois and John speak of you. Are they up at the lodge?"

The two canoes came into shore side by side. Not for anything would Nancy have confessed how shaky she felt every time she stole a look back at the dead bear—not with this debonaire Nimrod chatting to her as if they had met at some happy, cozy little tea in town.

Mrs. Dupre took the news also stolidly, merely nodding her head.

"He one ver' fine man," she said fervently. "He kill all bear."

Two weeks later Lois arrived with a pale, chastened Petsie and a weary, harassed John in tow. Nancy met them at the falls station, tanned and perfectly happy, with a strange object dangling around her neck, polished, curved claws strung Indian fashion on a thong of deer hide.

"You poor, lonely, forsaken child!" exclaimed Lois. "Did you think we were never coming? What on earth are those claws for?"

"They're a symbol of romance," said Nancy, placidly. "The bear nearly ate me."

"Bears don't eat people," interrupted John, bluntly. "You don't have to go any farther. Jack's written to me, and we—Lois and Petsie and myself—have agreed to permit him to protect you from all bears in the future. I've known him since he was ten, and when Lois asked you up this year she hoped—"

"John!" Lois' tone was final. Nancy laughed softly, her fingers holding the claws.

"But the bear really started it," she said.

Beautiful Petrified Trees. Within the stretch of Arizona's painted desert of brilliant hues lies one of the marvels of the land, the 60 square miles of petrified forest. There lie preserved for all time fallen tree monarchs, millions of years old, turned to rocks. Mammoth trunks, sometimes five feet in diameter and 50 feet in length, or cracked smoothly into blocks, are transformed into everlasting stone, beautiful in quality and coloring—quartz, agate, chalcedony, jasper and exquisite opal, infinite in the variety of delicate tint and rich shading. The method of petrification by which the giant trees became rock was one of the strange alchemistries of nature. Probably the wash of water from hot mineral springs rich in silica was the cause. The chemical permeating the tissues of the plant, acted as a hardening agent, preserving the original structure and detail of the tree with astonishing perfection.

A Policeman in the Spotlight. When utility and beauty clash in the streets of Washington, D. C., usefulness is apt to get the worst of it. For instance, no lights but those enshrined in beautiful lamp-posts are allowed to shine at night; as a result the useful traffic cop at bad corners is kept in the dark.

But the policeman at the corner of Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue is taking no chances of being run down. He stands on a platform surrounded by a sheet-iron fence painted white. At right a searchlight is focused on him from a roof—Popular Science Monthly.
